How to manage the cow in her stall is one of the difficulties as great as that of feeding. Unless great care is taken, a cow is liable to void her droppings where she will come in contact with them, when taking her rest. Stanchious are but partial remedies, and to resort to an extreme is to cause discomfert to the animal. Despite all the precautions that may be taken, a portion of the filth dries on the file of the cow, and also on the udder. The necessity of washing the udder and teats with warm soap and water, rinsing with clear soap and water, rinsing with clear water and wiping with a clean towol should be apparent to all, yet this pre-caution is seldom practiced, and disease goes into the imilk, the strainer being no protection.

Every farmer knows how unsightly the tuits of grass appear in the pasture which have been stimulated by the droppings of the animals. When the cows are on the pasture it will pay to collect this manuro daily, or go into the fields with a rake and scatter it. This may appear like extra labor, but it will pay. Cattle seem to avoid these tufts, and antil the field is plowed again some of the land will become poorer and of the land will become poorer and other portions richer.

A sudden change from the dry food of winter to green food is Jinble to cause the cows to fall off in milk, owing to the "scours." Where ensilage has been used the liability is not so great. Young rye and early grasses are very laxative. The best method is to allow the animals on the grily yes but a short time of first. on the early rye but a short time at first, gradually extending the indulgence un-til the risk of bowel disorder has passed.

In Western New York where graves are grown and kept till Christmas, the yield of an acre is estimated at about four tons, while the cost of the labor is said to be no more than for an acre of corn. The grapes, however, even when prices are low, give four times the profit derived from corn. Some seasons the grape crop brings high prices in that section, as they usually reach the mar-section, as they usually reach the marlet when the main supply is over.

Currants have been neglected of recent years, owing to the ravages of enemies, yet the enomics can be kept in check by proper remedies and care. As meny as 2,000 bushels can be planted on an acre, and a good, thrifty bush can be made to produce as many as five pounds of currants. The soil requires being kept clean, and plenty of manure should be supplied.

This is an excellent time for renew-

This is an excellent time for renewing the pasture, or grass land, by seeding. Use a rough harrow on the bare places if possible, but whether the ground is disturbed or not, scatter grass seed and plenty of it, wherever it may be needed. Keep the stock away from the field until the new grass gets a start.

There is no sure remedy for mildew in geoseberries. It may be avoided to a certain extent, however, by trimming the bushes so as to give them an open head, which allows the air and sunlight to reach the center of the bush more fready. freely.

Level culture of potatoes permits of the retention of more moisture in the ground, presenting less surface for evaporation than hills, and the ground can also be more easily cultivated, so as to keep the top soil loose.

For seed use sound and smooth pota-toes, allowing two good eyes to each piece. Large pieces are better than small ones. Be careful not to allow a single diseased tuber among the seed

The bottom of the straw stack, which often gets wet, is a source of disease and becomes the harboring place of insects.

HOUSEHOLD HINTS.

To Cook Beets—There are few vegetables which resist the efforts of the cook to render them tender by boiling as does the beet. If is safe to allow two hours for boiling any beets purchased in market at this season. At the end of winter the market beet will require soaking in cold water for at least ten hours before they are cooked, and cooking slowly three hours in boiling water. Do not saft beets till half an hour before they are taken off the fire. When beets are quite young and are pulled fresh from the ground, they may be cooked in an hour's time; but if they have been out of the ground any length of time, so that the outside skin has become toughened, it will take double this time. Wilted vegetables, or vegetables that are stale, take from a third to double the time to cook that those gathered fresh from the garden do. After boiling your beets, plunge thom into cold water, slice into a deep earthen dish, season them with salt and pepper, and barely cover them with vinegar. Put a plate over the dish and seasoning penetrate them. The vinegar may be omitted, if you prefer, in favor of butter. A pickled beet is a nice rollsh to keep on hand. Boil a half peck of medium-sized blood red beets till tender, then slice them. To every sliced beet add a slice of raw white onion and two or three peppercorns. To every dozen beets add two or three two-inch pieces of horse-radish root. Put the beets into a deep stone jar. Pour boiling hot cider vinegar over them, put on the cover of the jar and set it in a moderate oven for about half an hour. At the end of this time remove the jar, take off the cover and let the beets cool. When they are thoroughly cold cover them up, set them away and use them as needed.

Palpitation of the heart is much benefited by the application of cold over the heart—particularly if the transle is of nervous origin. A wet sponge hid over the heart is a pleasant mode of applying cold; if the patient is in bed, a cloth may be wrung out of cold water and folded to form a compress should laid on the heart; this compress should be well covered with dry cloth to prevent wetting of the clothing, and also for the purpose of retaining the moisture.

Baby Hysteria—Do not say your baby is bad tempered when it has attacks of loud crying, especially if the cries are accompanied by stiffening of the limbs, tremblings or the reverse, limpness and apparent loss of consciousness. A doctor should be consulted and the child treated for hysteria. "Cradle hysteria" is more amenable to treatment than the drawing-room variety.

Cuttoaco, Feb. 10.—The anti-option bill now pending in Congress bad more to do with the course of prices on the Beard of Trade to-day than all other influences combined. With the fluctuation of opinion and the circulating of rumors tending to show that it would or would not-become a law, prices went up or down. The markets, especially wheat, were nervous and subject to periods of great activity and excitement, followed by decided duliness. Near the cless it was reported that Lamson Bros. had received a dispatch from some in authority in Washington that it was extremely doubtful whether the committee would ever report on the bill and thore was no danger of its paveling.
